

10 smart designs help the Government control people's actions every day

Here are 10 smart designs around the world that help the government control people's actions every day and our city more comfortable. Invite you to consult!

1. Discover inside the startup's new headquarters for HomePolish interior design in New York
2. 22 impressive space-saving design ideas for a small apartment
3. 38 extremely creative design ideas for narrow-sized apartments (Part 1)

Today, TipsMake.com will introduce you 10 smart designs around the world to help the government control people's actions every day and our city more comfortable. Invite you to consult!

The cover on the outside of the red light pole helps to prevent poster or advertisement from being posted on it.

This invention is sometimes called " Anti-urination ." It is made of a triangular piece of metal, with a metal angle in the way that anyone who tries to get stuck will get stuck in the shoe.

This trash is intentionally made to limit people from throwing large items.

When traveling in London basement, you can listen to classical music while waiting for the train. It is believed that classical music is an effective way to reduce criminal acts and anti-social behavior online. Besides, it also helps people calm down, not be stressed by crowded trains and delays.

© citytransport.info

In the past, if you wanted to reach the cities of Rocha and Maldonado in Southern Uruguay, you would have to catch a raft over Laguna Garzon. In 2016, the Government here built a bridge between the two banks. But instead of building straight like most other bridges, they built a circle. The reason for this is, if you walk around you won't be able to drive fast, so you have to travel very slowly to ensure safety.

© www.lasgarzas.lat

A fake button on the traffic light column looks like something. However, this button does not work at all! When you want to cross the road, you press it first, traffic stops. However, in most cases, traffic lights are controlled automatically - the car will stop, but we often have the illusion that we have stopped it.

The ornament is placed on the edges of the low walls to prevent skateboarding youth.

This architectural feature is added to the University campus in Cambridge, UK to prevent skateboarding on it.

Portland Loos is a toilet located on the sidewalk in public areas. What makes them special is that they can easily clean up and prevent crime or drug use. The top and bottom bars of the area allow police to observe if they suspect illegal activities . These toilets are made of solid steel and cannot be damaged by a baseball bat or destroyed by fire. However, there is no sink or tap water, there is only one tap on the outside control panel and no mirror, as the mirror can be broken.

© theloo.biz

A digital screen equipped with smoke detectors on Stockholm's crowded street aims to encourage people to quit smoking. The man in the picture started coughing fiercely when someone smelled of cigarettes coming closer.

© dailymail.co.uk

See also: What will happen if you stop smoking now?

In Japan, the government installed bright green lights on railway stations, where there was a high suicide from people jumping on rails. During 4 years of installing green lights, 84% reduction in suicide rate . So it seems very useful!

© flickr.com

In addition to the above examples, we cannot help but mention smart and highly motivating advertising from Nike.

RUN!

See also: 20 most impressive advertising ideas on social networks in 2016

Having fun!

You finished reading the article "10 smart designs help the Government control people's actions every day" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.