This creative puzzle game is like a mix of Tetris and Sudoku. The rules are very simple. You have a 7×7 grid, filled with white balls or numbers on it, from 1 to 7.

Whenever a numbered ball is in a column or row of the same number of balls as the number on it, the ball is deleted. If the ball is deleted next to a white ball, the white ball will crack, then burst to reveal a numbered ball.

The goal, like Tetris, is not to get the balls to the top and score points while doing that. The game is simple, but the fun to challenge is endless. Everything except rankings can be experienced offline.

8. Mini Metro

Another puzzle game with a beautiful interface, Mini Metro, allows you to build your own mass transit system. Using maps of real-world cities, you can draw your own routes to connect different stations.

You have a limited number of routes and trains, as well as an increasing number of stations, so you have to put everything wisely. If people wait too long at any one station, you will lose.

The maps, as well as the layout of the game are very simple and beautiful, with aesthetics similar to the minimalist maps found in many major cities.

Using real-world leaders, place names and historical sites, Civil is a turn-based game that is easy to play in quick time. This makes it the perfect option for iOS.

Although you can participate in online and local multiplayer mode, an offline AI campaign is an extremely interesting option on a subway or long flight.

If Civilization VI is unappealing, there are other ways to play Civilization on your phone.
