

164 applications you should remove from your phone immediately

Recently, security researchers at White Ops discovered 164 malicious apps on Google Play with more than 10 million downloads.

These malicious apps are called 'CopyCatz', as the name suggests, they will fake popular software on Google Play to deceive users, then hack into your phone and start displaying ads. .

This type of malware was first discovered in 2017, affecting millions of old phones. Most of the victims were in Asia (India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Indonesia and Myanmar), with more than 381,000 devices in Canada and 280,000 devices affected in the US.

Security firm Check Point estimates that within two months, malicious apps have brought in cybercriminals more than $ 1.5 million and it spread mainly on older smartphones running Android 5.0 and below.

Displaying too many ads will slow down the phone, drain the battery and lose personal information. Here is a list of harmful apps you should remove from your phone:
