Podcast is for everyone. Unfortunately, this means managing podcasts can become a regular task. Fortunately, tons of podcast apps available for Android can automatically download, organize and play podcasts. This allows users to focus on listening to podcasts rather than spending time watching them. Check out some of the best free podcast apps for Android through the following article.

Top best Podcast app for Android

1. Castbox
2. Podcast Addict
3. Google Podcasts
4. Stitcher
5. Podcast Go

1. Castbox

Boasting so many awards, Castbox is one of the most popular podcast apps for Android. With a clean, easy to use interface, Castbox allows users to subscribe, listen and create custom playlists. This app is also free to use and without ads. There are in-app purchases, however, they are absolutely optional and do not affect the core experience.

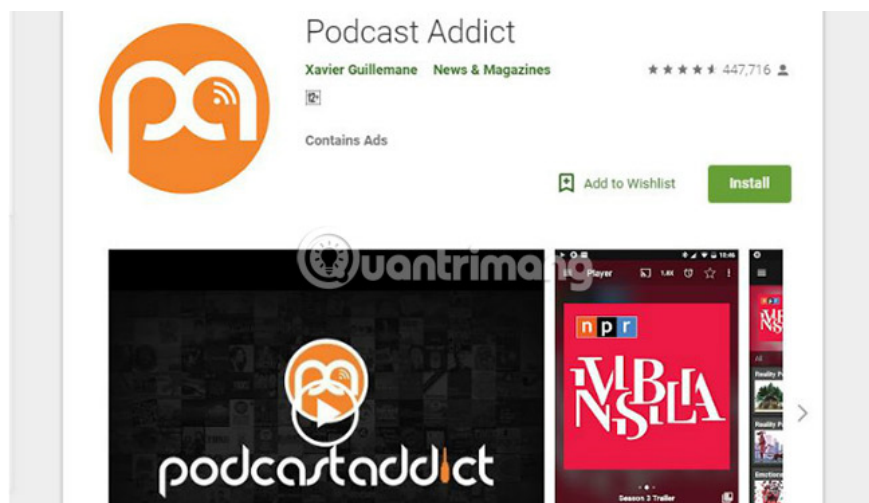

Castbox acts as a portal for over 1 million podcast channels, allowing users to access more than 95 million podcasts. This application offers users the option to stream episodes or download to listen offline. In addition, Castbox can help users discover new podcasts by offering subscription-based suggestions and podcast listening habits for each person. Moreover, Castbox also supports Chromecast and Amazon Echo for additional listening options.

2. Podcast Addict

Do you want to manage podcasts, Internet radio, audio books, YouTube, Twitch, SoundCloud and RSS feed news from an application? With Podcast Addict, that is no longer a distant dream. Podcast Addict has over 8 million downloads and received many positive feedbacks. Podcast Addict has access to top podcast networks and has a powerful discovery system to help users find new podcasts.

In addition, Podcast Addict has powerful playback options. It allows users to set different playback speeds. Moreover, users can configure download and delete automatically. For example, users can install applications that download episodes while sleeping, making sure the files are ready to work when they wake up. Podcast Addict is completely free to use, however, some occasional ads will appear.

3. Google Podcasts

Google Podcasts is one of the new apps on this list, and of course, it's not as 'flashy' as some of the other available podcast apps. Google Podcasts provides integration with Google Assistant.

When a user subscribes to podcasts, the application will download episodes for offline listening. The process is synchronized on all devices, allowing users to pause listening on this device and continue listening on other devices. In addition, the ability to integrate with Google Assistant allows users to control voice playback, which is essential for those who like to listen to podcasts when hands-free.

4. Stitcher

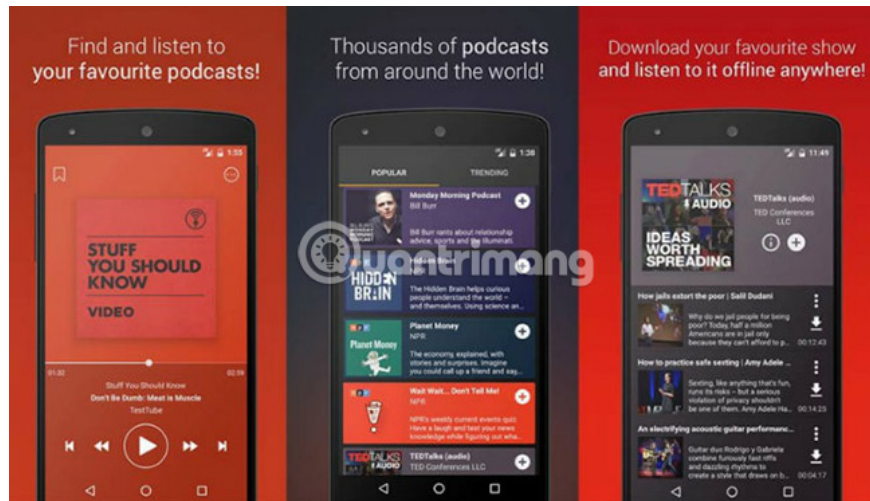

If you're a podcast addict and feel that you don't have enough favorite shows, Stitcher may be the app for you. Stitcher allows users to subscribe to podcasts as well as Internet radio stations (Internet radio station). What makes Stitcher different from other podcast applications is how it connects users' favorite podcasts together to create a live radio listening experience. In addition, users can even add break time between episodes to listen to the latest news, sports updates and more.

Stitcher is completely free to use; however, this app also has a premium version that allows users to access exclusive content produced by Stitcher. This content ranges from politics, sports, crime, to original Marvel content like the Wolverine: The Long Night podcast series.

5. Podcast Go

If you're looking for a simple experience, you might want to try Podcast Go. Podcast Go is a fairly basic experience and provides core features such as the ability to subscribe to programs, download episodes for offline listening and many different playback speeds. However, don't expect it to do more.

This application is free. However, it supports advertising. At the time of writing, if the user pays $ 2.99 (VND 69,000), the ad will be removed. Overall, the most attractive feature of Podcast Go is the simplicity and attractive flat design of the user interface. If you are looking for an easy-to-use podcast app, Podcast Go can be the perfect choice.
