

5 things Google can do, Bing doesn't

Bing did a great job now that everyone is talking about it, making Google CEO wary. But there are things Bing has to offer while Google runs well.

Review + movie time

Google has a very fashionable feature. You only need to enter your 'films' and your current location into Google, then Google will show you the names of the movies you are playing and the start time of the movie. After that, you can click on a trailer, reviews or other information about the movie. Again, Bing does not have this feature.

Map

If you want to quickly find a map of a town or city, you can simply enter the word 'map' following the place name on Google. Doing so with Bing, it tries to locate businesses on the map where you pay special attention or sometimes there is no map at all but only for normal results.

8 Dec 2008 ... Bob Marley, who died on 11 May, 1981, aged 36 was not just an accomplished and influential musician; he was the first ambassador of Jamaica

Sometimes you can't remember a specific detail, only part of it. Google has a feature so you can enter a small asterisk (*) in the sentence you want to fill out. For example, I tried searching for the famous Jamaican singer and songwriter Bob Marley at the time *. Google then highlighted the answer in bold font in the search result descriptions, so it's easy to choose the results. You can find the answer via Bing but the more 'niche' the information, the less detailed the result.

Features both search engines can do:

They can calculate math equations, weather forecasts, flight status and information on hotels in your area . But even when Bing can do the same, Google services still work better.

(Note, this is a user review in the UK and a search in English).
