Surely everyone has been advised: ' Should work smarter than work too hard ', but is working hard a smart way to work? 8 useful tips on the job for young people below may suggest or help you break through thinking for success, because they are very effective for my life. Invite you to consult!

1. Find someone who has the lifestyle or work you want

Simply based on personal experience, this person will show you how they can understand where they are and understand themselves.

Even if they can't immediately help you do it easily, send that person an email to schedule a friendly chat at a certain cafe and learn more about his career path. there.

The fact that I, the author, did this three times while working in the banking industry. Most bankers are not known for their easy-going personality, but they are known for being an outstanding individual. Is there anything more a successful person like than sharing his experience with you?

2. Developing 'poisoning' and matching skills for yourself, not necessarily work-related skills

All competitors have the skills and experience necessary to 'overcome' you in your favorite job battle. This is the same as when you drive in rush hour in the city, if you want to get ahead of others, you need to go into the roads that bring the most efficiency. Obviously, you will finish later if you choose smaller roads.

This situation is also easy to see in working skills: you need to be steadfast in using important skills, but if you use these skills to spend too much energy, you will feel this. too much to endure while trying to finish the job. Developing "toxic" skills that no opponent has played a necessary role. It will help you become interesting and work effectively.

3. Find a mentor

The ideal thing is to have a superior person with your company. It is also possible that anyone who has a lot of work experience in the field you are doing is a well-known and influential person. And again, if you create sympathy with this person, you will get a place to answer hundreds of questions related to your career path. Moreover, they are more important when you need someone to assure you personally.

4. Rearrange daily efforts to achieve what you want in the future

If you can sketch your own picture of your success impressively, ask yourself: " Have I done anything remarkable right now? ". If the answer is no, roll up your sleeves and start playing immediately.

You can't walk slowly in the crowd if you want to lead it one day. So are you ready to do something today to stand out from other individuals?

5. Prepare a 5-year plan

This plan not only helps you realize where you want to go on your career path in the next 5 years, but more importantly it must be a detailed plan: " How can I get to the destination? ".

Start from where you want to go in 5 years and then start backing up, step by step, even including the work / projects / achievements you need to achieve between steps like so. As a result, you may feel frightened. If you are an ambitious person, you will realize that you have to take these steps now.

6. Don't think: 'It must happen, it will happen.'

This thought will make you feel extremely comfortable and effective when gradually "recovering" after your own failure. Actually, this reason is just an excuse for you to do nothing.

Of course, it will also be a poison to your accomplishments if you are careless because this way of thinking will eliminate the burden of working and allow you to be more passive, instead of taking over the world. motivated to achieve your goals.

7. Stay with respectful friends and isolate those who spread the negative

People tend to redefine what is normal, what is feasible and what is recognized as successful based on the perspective of those around them. In fact, you can achieve things that no one would think possible if you adjust your standards to a higher level . The more successful or happy you are, the more you become a source of spiritual encouragement or make your friends or colleagues feel negative.

Create a community of people that you feel respectable to be able to raise your standards and thereby achieve better results. Stay away from people who are less emotional about your ability, which makes them feel good. Remember, people you respect can have objective, multi-dimensional thoughts or make you extreme with a single way of thinking.

8. Real intelligence is a more important predictor of success than IQ

Start training your intelligence right now. A decent IQ will be a vital factor for any interesting job, but it is not an absolute indicator of success.

In fact, studies show that when your IQ is high (above 125), this is necessary for most of the top jobs in the world. A more reliable factor of intelligence demonstrating one's success is their creative ability and " practical intelligence ".

Malcolm Gladwell , author of " Outliers ", described: " It is not a mere knowledge. It is what will help you understand the real situation accurately and have a solution to solve the direction of I ". A high IQ will help you solve your assigned tasks smoothly, but not enough to make you stand out more. To be successful, you must create your own work, identify what part will be completed without you being involved.
