

Apple CEO said that learning code is more important than learning English

During the visit to President Emmanuel Macron in France, Apple CEO Tim Cook made the comment that the code is the language for everyone, not just the coder. Even Apple CEO said that learning code is more important than learning a second language, typically English.

During the visit to President Emmanuel Macron in France, Apple CEO Tim Cook made the comment that code is a language for everyone, not just coder. Even Apple's CEO said that learning code is more important than learning a second language, typically English.

Language is the means of human communication. Almost every country has a language that is the communication system. Knowing a new language, especially English, will open the door for us to come to the world.

But with Tim Cook, he thinks that learning code is more important than learning English and it is for everyone. He said: 'If I was a 10-year-old student in France, I would study code. Because I think it's more important to me than learning English. This does not mean that I advise people not to learn English. In my opinion, you can understand that it is the language you use to assert yourself with 7 billion people in the world.'

Tim Cook said that all public schools around the world should put code into the subject area.

As the head of Apple, one of the largest technology companies in the world with the majority of employees is young, Tim Cook wants everyone in the world to know that code is understandable.

However, with the current technological age, knowing the code will give you a chance to find a job with an attractive salary.

According to recent research by Glassdoor, in the US more than one third of jobs with desirable salary are related to computer technology and code.

See more:

1. Female 10-year-old coder was invited by Google and Microsoft to work
2. 13 tips to help you learn code super fast without being too expensive
3. The most important programming languages ??in the Internet of Things era

You finished reading the article "Apple CEO said that learning code is more important than learning English" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.