

Apple for the most important new features for iOS 13

iPhone fans are hoping to have a new feature appear on iOS that will be disappointing when the next OS, iOS 12 is released.

Axios said, Craig Federighi, Apple's vice president, said he asked the iOS team to focus on performance and stability (ie unseen changes) instead of new features like Redem the Home screen '.

Other features such as redesigning the CarPlay interface, 'updating photos, photo editing and sharing features' are also expected to move back to iOS 13 to be released in 2019. Instead , iOS 12 will focus on 'AR, child health monitoring and monitoring'.

This change is quite similar to what they did on MacOS Snow Leopard. After years of constantly launching new features in each macOS version, Apple has temporarily taken a slow step to focus on the operation and stability of the device.

Snow Leopard is clearly not an attractive "release of the OS" but it has overcome many bugs that can ruin Apple's reputation.

Look at the latest OS you will see. iOS 11 launched many new features but since its release, it has been flooded with errors, from keyboard errors, screen errors when it is cold or time-consuming. And of course, can not forget the big scandal related to deliberately slowing down the old iPhone when not providing enough power for the device.

Apple house loyalists will look at these issues and say that it is only because they are growing too big, too fast, and that's right. iOS 11 has so many problems that many people choose not to update the OS. (This is also a bad thing because the new OS update often brings security updates).

Focusing on performance means that this year's iOS 12 release will not be "bright" but like Snow Leopard, error correction is needed to ensure future iOS releases are more perfect when available. 1 solid foundation.

Apple will announce iOS 12 at WWDC, their annual developer conference in June. There may still be surprises on this OS but above all you should not expect too.
