

Apple high-end headphones can be released before the end of the year

Another report shows that Apple is working with high-end noise-reduction headphones. The headset will be considered a new competitive headset brand like Bose and Beats by Dre (which Apple owns), Bloomberg reports.

Another report shows that Apple is working with high-end noise-reduction headphones. The headset will be considered a new competitive headset brand like Bose and Beats by Dre (which Apple owns), Bloomberg reports.

However, the new headset will also face similar problems with HomePod, which has been delayed and has undergone many redesigns.

Apple has been producing headphones since last year, and their new headphones will have wireless connectivity like AirPods. However, Bloomberg sources said it is possible that the design of this headset will inherit the predecessor headphones or the old design will completely dissolve a new headset model. - Ming-Chi Kuo analyst of KGI Securities shared. This person said that Apple is working on a pair of "convenient headsets like AirPods with better sound quality".

There is no leaked information about how much this new headset can cost, but will cost more than HomePod products for $ 349 and even higher than other smart headphones on the market from Sonos and Amazon.

High-end headphones of Beats cost about $ 300, while Bose and Sennheiser also have product models that range in price range above.
