

Archeology finds 4000 year old bear head clay toys

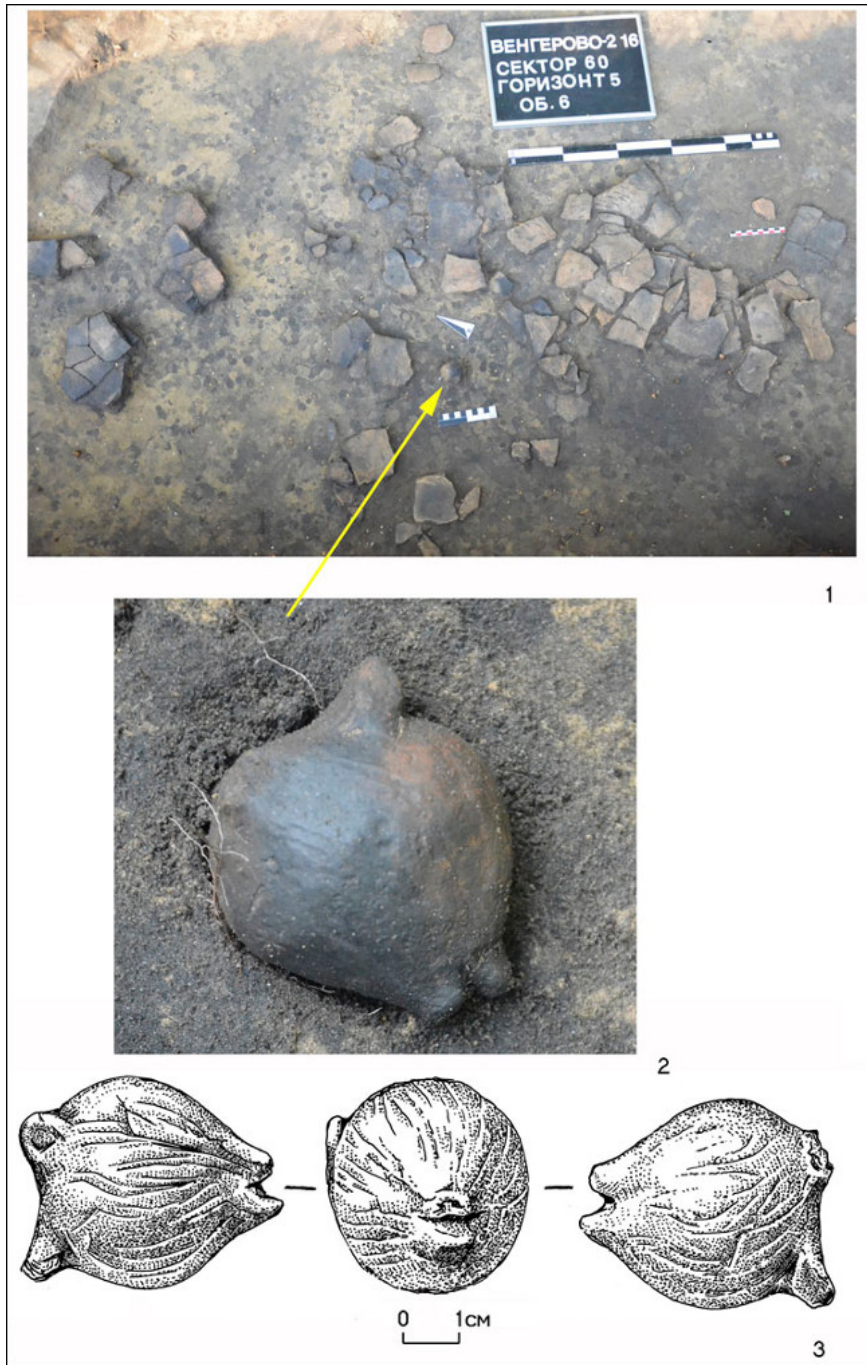

Made of burnt clay, the hollow inside is a jingle that is found in a strange object suspected to be a children's toy estimated to be 4,000 years old.

Made of burnt clay , the hollow inside is a jingle that is found in a strange object suspected to be a children's toy estimated to be 4,000 years old.

Accordingly, this strange object can be a prehistoric children's entertainment toy about 4,000 years ago and it is also one of the oldest ancient toys found in the world today. Excavations take place at a bronze age settlement in Novosibirsk area.

A direct excavator of the relics told the Siberian Times site: 'This is an ancient children's toy thousands of years ago, it bears a bear shape, made from baked clay, the interior is hollow and can be an inner rock hitting the object's body creates strange kang sounds '.

" We still cannot determine what kind of specific stone inside this toy is, and maybe we will conduct an X-ray of the object to find out . "

In detail about the date of this toy's appearance, the experts identified that bear-shaped clay-fired toys can appear between 3,800 and 4,000 years old. And now the research team suspects that there are strange characters on the surface of baked clay that may be the signature of the sculptor, making this object.

Earlier, also in Vengerovo district in Novosibirsk region, archaeologists also found more than 50 ancient tombs, 100 ritual pits and traces of two houses of ancient people who once lived.

You finished reading the article "Archeology finds 4000 year old bear head clay toys" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.