

Asus and Acer will sell netbooks for $ 0

If solving the shortage of processors, Acer will implement a free netbook service package, while Asus will sell for 1 euro, in the short term in Europe.

If solving the shortage of processors, Acer will implement a free netbook service package, while Asus will sell for 1 euro, in the short term in Europe.

According to Taiwanese technology news website DigiTimes, the plan by Taiwanese computer maker Asustek Computer (Asus) is done through a partnership with telecommunications service providers in Europe. As a result, Asus will offer a 1-euro netbook service or 0 euros via mobile carriers. Currently, Asus' telecommunications partners in Europe are T-Mobile and TNT.

Previously, Asus cooperated with Japanese telecom companies NTT Docomo and E-Mobile. Combined with mobile carrier E-Mobile, Asus has offered the Eee PC 701 laptop package for 100 yen (0.91 USD) with 3.5G online services.

Meanwhile, Acer is also promoting a similar business model. Digtimes said that according to a number of telecom carriers that Acer will conduct a free netbook service package as soon as the company finishes with the current processor shortage problem.

Acer has negotiated with a number of telecom carriers to cooperate on this model, so it can offer a discounted netbook package to zero. laptop in 2008.

You finished reading the article "Asus and Acer will sell netbooks for $ 0" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
