

Asus ExpertBook B9 laptop review: the choice is 'all for work'

Asus ExpertBook B9 is a high-end laptop model aimed at users who value mobility and security. The appearance of this product in Vietnam market will create an interesting counterweight to the long-established names from Lenovo, Dell and HP.

Thin, light and no-frills

Many of you will put Asus ExpertBook B9 (codename ExpertBook B9450) on the scale with famous names for end users such as Macbook Pro 13, Dell XPS 13, HP Specter and Asus' Zenbook line. All of the above names have a sleek, fashionable, easy-to-attract look and the admiration of others. None of that is in ExpertBook B9.

I think the design of this laptop is of a different aesthetic, serious and workaholic as the name Asus puts it: Expert - Expert. Square, minimalist appearance with black tones covering all details, ExpertBook B9 is suitable for users who like simplicity and color. This is the same style that Lenovo ThinkPad, Dell Latitude or HP Elitebook has brought to users for years.

Lightweight will be the first impression you get when holding this laptop model. With the 33Wh battery version I rated in the machine weighs only 0.87 kg and approximately 1 kg on the 66Wh battery version, the charger comes 65W weighs about 300 grams. The total weight of the device when I go to work is only 1.2 kg, the figure is too attractive for those who often carry computers to go everywhere like me.

To achieve such an ideal weight, Asus said it uses lithium-magnesium alloy material to process the chassis, while the size of the device is minimized with an ultra-thin screen border (4mm on the two sides.). Besides the thin and light element, durability is also the point that this laptop focuses on MIL-STD 810G military standard certification.
