

Asus Precog - Asus's most anticipated laptop in 2019 cannot be launched as planned

Hope Precog will bring a great experience to respond to the users' wait.

On Computex 2018, Asus surprised the world by introducing a concept of a beautiful and unique laptop model called Asus Precog. Asus Precog is a laptop screen model with AI technology that Asus nurtures, with the biggest advantage is the ability to use extremely flexible.

As shown on stage, the Asus Precog can be folded in a pyramid shape and facing the screen to the sides like a tent, folded completely into it for use as a tablet, or can be opened and closed. Use as a normal laptop and now the screen below will become a virtual keyboard. Or you can flatten the computer to use both monitors as a display space (Asus calls this Book Mode), then connect the keyboard and mouse to the device via Bluetooth and act as a battery. often.

As for AI, Asus Precog is equipped with a unique feature called Intelligent Touch that works based on Intel's Movidius Myriad 2 visual processing unit. With this feature, the device can fully identify the input method that users use to change the interface accordingly, such as recognizing the position of the fingers to adjust the keyboard position, switch invent touch when touching the pen to the screen below.

With these unique advantages, Asus Precog is one of the most expected laptops in 2019 with the hope of bringing a new breath to the laptop market which is very brave with traditional designs. . And indeed Asus has planned to launch this laptop right this year, but it seems that things are not going as smoothly as planned by the Taiwanese manufacturer.

In a recent financial report, Asus mentioned that it will shape Precog as an independent product line that will be of special interest to the company in 2020. Thus, those who want to own a unique laptop model This will probably have to wait at least another 2 months, or even until Computex 2020.

Hope Precog will bring a great experience to respond to the users' wait.
