

Asus will have laptops to play 'terrible' games at CES 2011

Asus G73SW has a dream configuration with Core i7-2630QM chip, Geforce GTX 460M graphics card, Full HD standard screen and DDR3 8GB RAM.

Asus G73SW has a dream configuration with Core i7-2630QM chip, Geforce GTX 460M graphics card, Full HD standard screen and DDR3 8GB RAM.

Asus seems to have a very busy time at CES 2011. After surely introducing a tablet model, Taiwanese computer company will launch to 5 more "gaming" laptop models. at this event, according to Notebookitalia.

Asus will land five laptop models "terrible" game at CES 2011.

The worst model of these is the G73SW with a large screen of 17.3 inches with a Full HD resolution of 1,920 x 1,080 pixels. Its hardware configuration includes 2 GHz Intel Core i7-2630QM processor, DDR3 to 8GB RAM, Geforce GTX 460M graphics card, USB 3.0 port and dual storage system with traditional hard drive and SSD.

Prices for the Asus G73SW model are $ 2,500 (in the US market).

In addition, Asus also has 4 other models also for gamers located in two series of 15.6-inch and 17.3-inch N53SV and N73SV respectively. The resolution in the initial configuration is 1,366 x 768 pixels and the more advanced option is the Full HD 1080p standard. All models come with 2-GHz Intel Core i7-2630QM processor, GeForce GT 540M graphics card like Acer's model 8742G.

Starting price for N53SV and N73SV series is $ 1,200 (in the US market).

All 5 models will be officially launched at CES 2011 from 6th to 9th January 2011 in Las Vegas, USA and available on the market this month.

You finished reading the article "Asus will have laptops to play 'terrible' games at CES 2011" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.