Build supply areas and fortifications

In Battlefield 5, gamers can build supply stations that the rest of the party can use to replenish ammunition or medical supplies. They are extremely useful to someone who is not playing the Support or Medic classes.

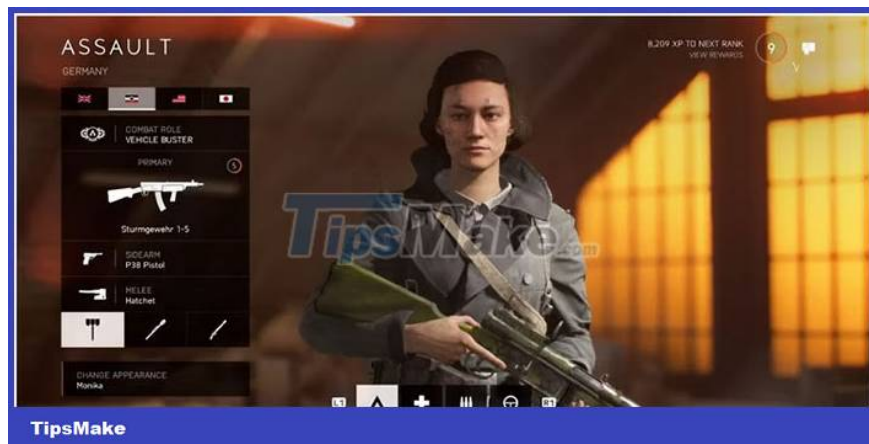

By building this zone, people can increase the chances of teams staying with the fight longer. However, the enemy can also use these supply stations.

Forts can be built around targets (areas to be captured). Fortifications such as sandbag walls can serve as refuges from bomb or sniper attacks, and some even block traffic. This is extremely useful because they can slow down tanks when trying to invade their area.

Customize characters and weapons

Players can customize characters, weapons, and vehicles in the Battlefield 5 main menu. Before entering a battle, take the time to check all your item details and add anything that has been collected.

One of the best customizations to do is the weapon as this will be the most used item in the battlefield. Everyone can adjust their weapons to suit their playstyle and choose the type of grenade they like. The attraction of Battlefield is the ability to customize a lot of items, giving gamers a lot of control over their playing experiences.

Take advantage of the surroundings

There are several maps for the Conquest modes and each map has its own unique environment. Longtime Battlefield players know environments can change during battle if they are damaged. Surrounding buildings can collapse, causing everything around to change completely.

This means that gamers can eliminate hidden enemy hiding places to give their side an advantage. Also, in some maps, there are areas of jungle or foliage that players can utilize to effectively hide. This is especially useful if people choose to fight as a Sniper class.
