

Box launches online document editing service Box Notes

The online storage service Box recently introduced Box Notes, a time-based document editing tool that allows more people to join at the same time.

The online storage service Box recently introduced Box Notes, a time-based document editing tool that allows more people to join at the same time.

Basically, the Notes Box is similar to Google Drive (Google Docs), you can edit, edit web-based files, see what others are doing with documents, what words are being typed, or post messages. comment, comment on something in the file.

Users can also embed images and videos directly into their document files. Box said that the above file editing feature will also be uploaded to mobile devices, and of course the document file can be saved on the Box cloud account for access at all times, everywhere.

Currently, Box Notes is in beta testing phase. You can access here , enter your email address and when your account is tried Box Notes, they will email. The time when Box Notes officially came into operation was the following year.

You can refer to the following video:

You finished reading the article "Box launches online document editing service Box Notes" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

