Huawei is planning to pre-install the 70 most popular Android apps on its future phone models?

Due to the impact of the U.S.-China trade war, Mate 30 - Huawei's flagship product line launched in 2019 has become the first phone to mark the disappearance of all services. Google on Huawei-branded smartphones. Everything is likely to remain unchanged on the upcoming P40 and P40 Pro models. However, the absence of the Google app does not mean that Android apps will disappear on Huawei phones.

According to reports from some reliable sources (MobilTelefon and Telegram), Huawei is planning to pre-install the 70 most popular Android applications on its future phone models.

In theory, you won't be able to install the Google Play Store on Huawei phones even after the ban on cooperation between the two companies goes into effect. But in fact, you can still use Android apps on this platform by downloading the APK file to your device. Of course, doing so will take quite a bit of time, and plan to pre-install popular Android apps on newly released devices so that users don't have to download APK files as Huawei's way of doing nothing wrong. , and also shows that they really care about the user experience.

However, most of the most popular Android apps rely on Google Play Services for stable operation. While Huawei phones do not have the above service, this will cause some Android applications to operate at a limited feature scale, affecting the overall experience.

Another problem to mention is that a large amount of pre-installed applications will consume a lot of memory resources, while not sure users really want to use them. Therefore, Huawei should integrate more features to allow removal of these pre-installed applications, instead of treating them as bloatware.

After all this is just a rumor, so there are still many big question marks that need to be answered. Let's wait for the official announcement from Huawei.
