Focus on the User:

After turning off the feature, we still see People and Pages on Google+ sidebar sometimes displayed, corresponding to popular Google+ pages related to search information, but whether Google+ is really the page The best social networking today?

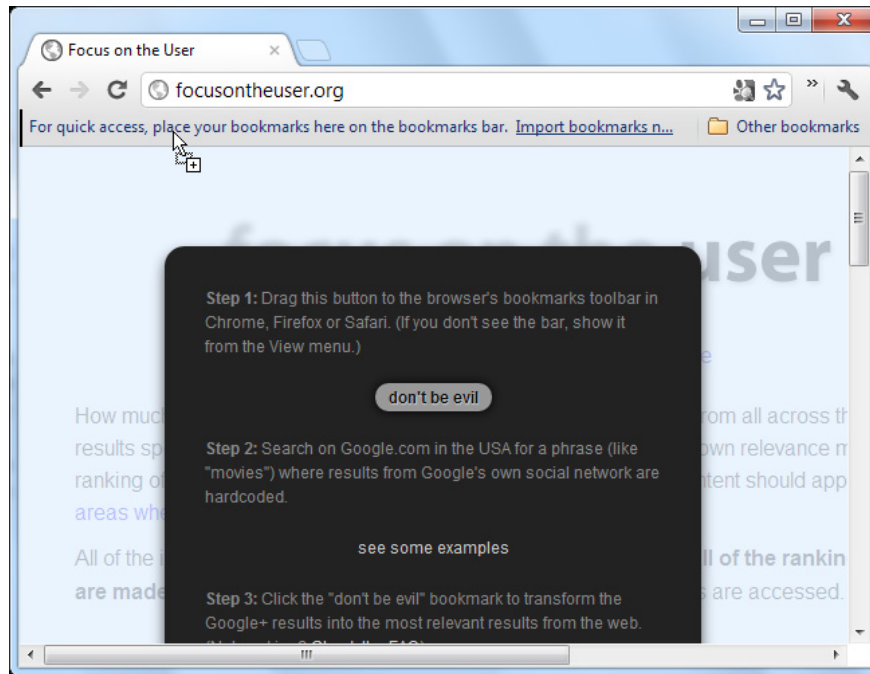

However, a project was created with the name Focus on the User not thinking so. Instead of just referring users to Google+, this system will display the most popular and convenient social networking sites, including Facebook, Twitter, YouTube .

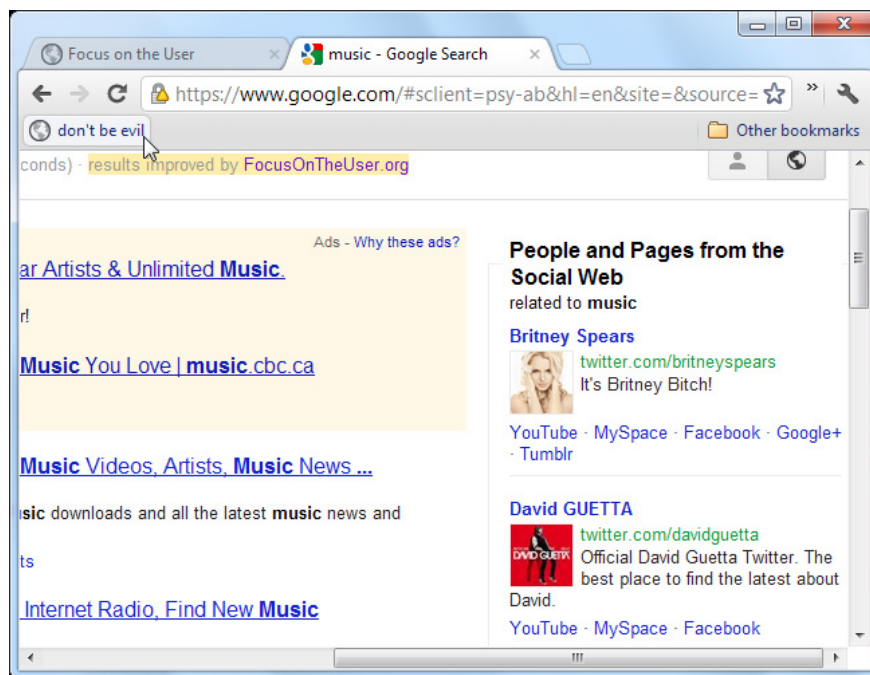

First, you'll have to activate the bookmark toolbar. In Firefox , right-click the toolbar and select Bookmarks Bar , and in Chrome , do the following:

Then, click the link Try a More Relevant Google on the Focus on the User page, drag and drop the don't be evil link (as shown below) into the bookmark bar:

Whenever you see the Google+ results on Google, click don't be evil so that Google displays social networking pages that match the search information:

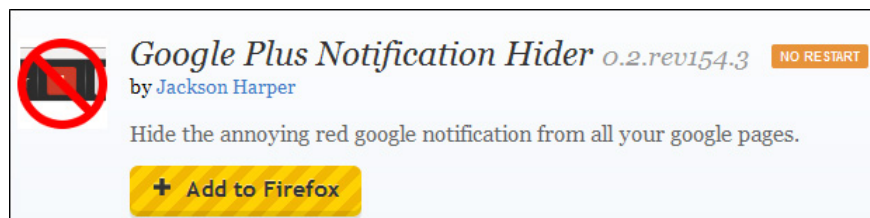

How does this process work? This bookmarklet system will scan all search results returned from Google to search for user accounts, choose social networking site with the highest ranking level. In other words, Google already knows about the best social networking sites today, but still prioritizes Google+ above all.

Hide Google+ notifications

If you are logged into your Google account, it is easy to see that the system always displays Google 'supervisor' notifications as shown below:

And in fact, Google doesn't have any options to turn off those notifications, but with extension Hide Google+ Notification for Chrome or Google Plus Notification Hider for Firefox, we can easily hide those that information of Google:

After installing the extension, you will no longer see the notification information as before, except when accessing Google+

Good luck!
