Among the new additions, the most notable feature of Chrome 13 is Instant Pages, which allows the browser to load pages instantly, so that users do not have to wait seconds to minutes as browsers other.

Previously, the long wait time depends on the speed of the Internet connection and the performance of the browser. But now, with Chrome 13's Instant Pages feature, that wait has come to an end.

Google Chrome software engineer Ziga Mahkovec said: " Chrome 13 will predict users to click on any link, so Instant Pages features quickly download the site from before the user clicks the link. Therefore, When the user clicks the mouse, the content of the whole site will appear immediately without waiting time as before. "

In addition, a number of other Chrome 13 enhancements also include a smarter address bar and search box, making it easier to turn back previously accessed pages, as well as enhance Print preview is available for both Windows and Linux users.

With the new release, Google expects them to continue to win new successes in the increasingly fierce " war " browser.
