

Chrome OS adds a built-in screen recording feature

This new Chrome OS feature will make it easier for students to review homework for tests as online lessons are becoming more and more popular.

In recent years, many teachers and students have used ChromeBook as the main device for teaching and learning. As remote training is taking place around the world, Google has made upgrades to support Chromebook users, of which the screen recorder is the most anticipated feature and it will be available on Chrome OS. March.

Doing this is quite simple, users just need to press the appropriate button on the Chromebook, a countdown timer in the middle of the screen will appear, the screen recording process will be executed and a recording circle will appear. appears in the toolbar.

Other Chromebook tools will also work, including the Chrome OS screen reader ChromeVox with ChromeVox menu search feature and smooth voice switching, automatically changing the voice of the browser. screen reading based on the language of the text.

Also with the new upgrade, parents can add their child's school account to their child's personal account managed with Family Link, Google's parental control app. This way, students can log in to their school account at home and use essential apps and websites, while parents can still set device and app permissions.

In terms of hardware, Google has announced that it will be rolling out more than 40 new Chromebooks this year. Google claims every model is equipped for exceptional Google Meet and Zoom experiences.

Google has also provided a list of available Chromebooks from brands for teachers or students to choose from to suit search needs, such as Acer's Chromebook Spin 511 and Lenovo's 300e, Samsung's Galaxy Chromebook, Chromebook Spin. Acer 713.

2020 is also the best-selling year ever for Chromebooks, in large part due to increased demand from online learning and Google built its services to cater to the needs of the Covid- 19 is going complicatedly around the globe.

You finished reading the article "Chrome OS adds a built-in screen recording feature" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.