

Coming soon with a unique 2-screen laptop

New laptop maker NajmTek plans to launch a new two-screen laptop called U-Book ('Universal Notebook') at the upcoming Consumer Electronics Show (CES).

New laptop maker NajmTek plans to launch a new two-screen laptop called U-Book ("Universal Notebook") at the upcoming Consumer Electronics Show (CES).

Like the Acer Iconia dual-screen laptops, the U-Book replaces the traditional keyboard with a multi-touch screen. One of the advantages of this touch screen keyboard is its ability to support multiple languages. Users can easily use keyboards with Latin, Cyrillic alphabets, or special characters, and also quickly switch between keyboards.

Even more interesting and exciting, NajmTek promises users will be able to create and save their own custom keyboard layouts, change key colors, shortcuts, size and order. keys.

In addition, U-Book looks like a standard laptop. Currently, NajmTek only offers simple images and some laptop parameters. Accordingly, U-Book will have an Intel dual-core processor (dual core) or quad-core (quad core), accompanied by a 250GB or 500GB hard drive, and Nvidia graphics card. The computer will also have a regular USB port and Ethernet port, a memory card reader port, HD webcam, and HDMI.

Details of this unique laptop will be revealed in just over a week.

You finished reading the article "Coming soon with a unique 2-screen laptop" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
