The functional interface reflects suspicious cases that need to be monitored, and the universal health notification function

According to a representative of the development team, the nCoV application supports Android and iOS operating systems, compatible with popular smartphones on the market . When creating an account, users are required to provide information including full name, date of birth, identification number, address and especially the phone number to receive OTP code to activate the account.

With Vietnam Health declaration, this is the application for development of Viettel Enterprise Solutions Corporation (Viettel Solutions). Through this application, people entering Vietnam can declare their health by scanning a QR code via a smartphone to receive full information to be declared.

After the declaration, the information about people on entry will be updated by the system about anti-epidemic centers and Vietnamese agencies for management. Based on the collected data, the authorities can accurately capture the number of people entering and leaving the country, manage suspected quarantine cases, provide statistics and report quickly and accurately. Mostly to local health agencies.

In addition to the above applications, people can also access electronic portals such as suckhoetoandan.vn/khaiyte or tokhaiyte.vn and follow the instructions to make electronic medical declarations. Earlier, at a meeting of the National Steering Committee for the Prevention of Epidemic Covid-19, the authorities said it would require universal health declaration from tomorrow (March 10, 2020).
