You usually put a home page so that when you open the browser, it will appear immediately without having to type the address in the Address bar or choose from Favorites. But to be like that, you must first take a step to run the web browser, which also takes you a little bit more time and if the home page is spyware or someone often 'jammed' then you must be pretty It's hard to get my homepage back to normal.

So, in order to avoid these troubles, you can set up your homepage right on your desktop and conveniently at the start of Windows. How to do the following:

- On the desktop, right-click, select Properties , select the Desktop tab, click the Customize Desktop button, select the Web tab, click the New button.
- In the New Desktop Item window, type in the homepage address in the Location box (if you prefer to set the saved page offline, select the Browse button), then click OK four times to close all windows.

Now, you will see your home page appear on the desktop in a small window. To enlarge this window in full screen, hover your mouse inside the window, its title bar will appear. Next, click the small triangle button in the upper left corner of the window, then select Cover Desktop from the menu. From here, you can browse the web just like in a real browser.

In addition, in the menu you can also perform some other functions such as: Synchronize (update the site), Properties (see the properties of the page), Customize My Desktop (edit settings for the homepage) , Restore (minimize the homepage in the window) . Later, if you want to return to the 'desktop as it used to be', right-click an empty area on the page, select Properties and do the same thing. change another wallpaper.
