

Dell's 'supermodel' Laptop XPS appears

The American computer company is about to launch a 15.6-inch XPS 15z laptop with an Adamo-inspired design that has stopped production since the beginning of this year.

The American computer company is about to launch a 15.6-inch XPS 15z laptop with an Adamo-inspired design that has stopped production since the beginning of this year.

According to the Cnet website, this is Dell's slimmest XPS laptop. The product has an outer shell made of special materials, chiclet keyboard, using Intel Core i5 chip, new generation i7 (Sandy Bridge), super high resolution screen and priced under 1,000 USD.

XPS is the Adamo, which is two of Dell's stylish laptops. In 2009, Adamo was startling in the technology world and considered the rival of the Apple MacBook Air.

However, the lack of strong optical drives and processors and high prices up to $ 2,000 have made it indifferent to customers. At the beginning of this year, Dell officially launched this product line.

Dell's ultra-thin XPS 15z laptop video:

You finished reading the article "Dell's 'supermodel' Laptop XPS appears" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

