Diablo Immortal Tips for Beginners

Test the strengths of each class

At the start of the game, the player must choose 1 from 6 classes: Barbarian, Crusader, Demon Hunter, Monk, Necromancer and Wizard. Some classes, like Barbarian, specialize in violent melee attacks, while others, like Wizard, are suitable for ranged battles thanks to their use of elemental magic. All 6 classes are possible, although some are a bit simpler.

For example, the Necromancer is a very versatile wizard capable of becoming a skeleton-centric pet class, a monster that defends with a bone wall, or an AoE chain reaction nightmare using Corpse Explosion. Some classes may be better than others if minimized for PvP or PvE, but they all have considerable depth and variety. The best starting choice is whatever the player is interested in.

Skill and flexible build

Although Diablo Immortal doesn't have many skill trees, it still boasts a wide variety of unlockable powers. As the character levels up, new skills become available and old skills grow stronger. In addition, powerful gear enhances the skill even further, either by buffing existing effects or by replacing them entirely.

It's natural to find favorite skills and develop a strategy around them during the early hours of play, but playing with new skills and building combinations will be beneficial. Even if players don't think a certain skill will suit their taste and playstyle, it's worth it to try new skills, as it can reveal unexpected power combinations.

Careful health management

The player has 3 health potions that are replenished on cooldown. There's also a short cooldown between potions, so it's important to be tactical when choosing the right time to deploy them in teamfights. Killing enemies and dealing significant damage to the boss also causes the red health orbs to drop, and collecting them restores health just like using a health potion.

Gamers can get these orbs even after consuming orbs or other health potions. How difficult it is to control health depends on the playstyle and class in the frontline. Whether striking as a Barbarian or standing back and avoiding damage like a Wizard, knowing when to consume a potion, when to snatch a health orb, or to retreat completely is an important skill. to survive certain tough battles.
