In Korea, senior politicians and economic officials are granted official and diplomatic passports that are valid for five years. But after each foreign business trip, they must return this passport.

Therefore, very few people can admire the appearance of the most mysterious passport in this world.

The first page of the passport has the national symbol on one side and the other side of the line: "The person holding this passport is protected by North Korea. Requesting the relevant individuals to allow the passport holder to travel freely again without obstruction, providing support and protection if necessary".
