Yahoo has just released a new version of its Yahoo Messenger instant messaging application on the web with other unique features completely for the PC version.

To use Yahoo Messenger on the web users only need an Internet-connected PC and a web browser without having to download and install.

Compared to the old version of Yahoo Messenger on the web, the new version has a lot of improvements in both features and user interface.

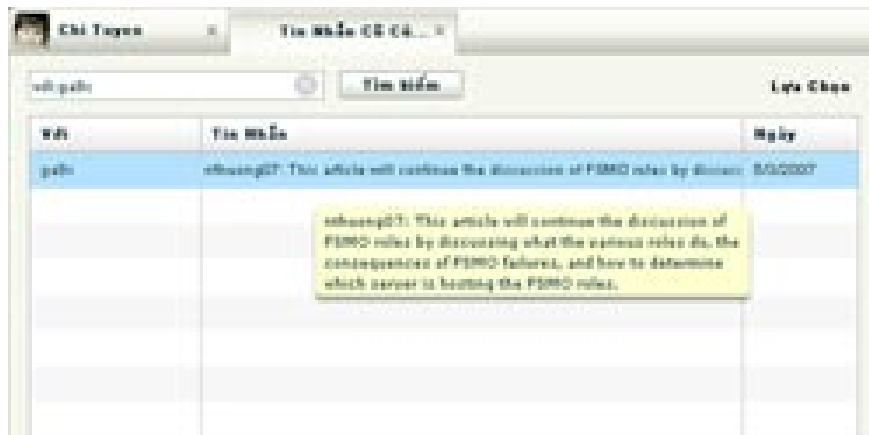

The application interface has been redesigned to resemble the Yahoo Messenger version on PC. The old version requires users to install Java to use it. This has been removed in the new version. The chat window is also redesigned exactly like Yahoo Messenger chat window on PC.

The basic features of Yahoo Messenger on the web are similar to the PC version. The version also fully supports the user's avatar display capabilities. Status messages are also more diverse than the old version and more like the PC version. Users are also free to create their own status lines for Yahoo Messenger on the web.

The most unique feature in the web version is the ability to display tabbed chat (TAB). With this feature every chat window will be merged into a single window that is extremely convenient to move and does not occupy much space and accelerate application speed. This is a new feature that only appears in Yahoo Messenger for Windows Vista.

Screen to review old messages

Each sentence in the Yahoo Messenger chat window on the web will now be displayed in a different color block that represents each person. Next to the block is the avatar representing the character talking. This feature is quite similar to Microsoft's Windows Live Messenger.

Just like Yahoo Messenger on a web-based PC now supports the ability to chat with Windows Live Messenger.

Currently, the new version of Yahoo Messenger on the web is still in the testing process in certain countries. Readers can discover more features of the new version by trying the application at <https://messenger.yahoo.com/>
