Scientists have discovered another dark side of the Etruscan civilization through a barbaric, strange skeleton.

Scientists have discovered another dark side of the Etruscan civilization through a barbaric, strange skeleton.

Accordingly, the incident was discovered right in the center of Tuscany, with a skeleton of at least 2,500 years old that was chained on the neck and ankle area.

And this is considered the first tomb of Etruscan civilization discovered in a state of barbaric, horror shackles.

When analyzing and measuring the remains, the results showed that the man was chained to two ankles with a total mass of iron weighing up to 5 pounds and a very heavy iron rim that always entered his neck.

"He died in chains, then was wrapped in a cloth and buried. We found a dark spot underneath the nape, this could be a piece of wood used to connect the rings. However, it may have rotted quite a lot over time." - Giorgio Baratti, archaeological professor at the University of Milan said in a statement.

In addition, a small metal ring is also found in this man's left finger. And this could also be metal burners to bind his body in a certain piece of leather or rope when executed .

Most archaeologists said that this man could be a maritime slave or an iron slave in the Etruscan civilization from the fourth century - the sixth century BC, suffered from brutal execution, and the execution process This can happen quickly, as prepared beforehand.

Not only that, on the head of this slave man's grave, the archaeological group also found the grave of a woman buried with earrings and a few other goods and goods of the fourth century. BC

Talking about the horror of the Etruscan civilization, archaeologist Giorgio Baratti also discovered at least four graves in the Tarquinia region, including the tomb of a masked man called Phersu , he I am holding a dog and being buried in a grave. It is possible that this is a dog attack on people then both may die and be buried in one turn.

Also in Tarquinia, many remains include women and children, men who are beheaded, clenched, tightened or severely injured can also be tortured. Etruscan scholar Nancy Thomson de Grummond, of Florida State University said in a statement.

All the above-mentioned findings prove that the traditional Etruscan civilization is not as simple as we think, there are many other forms of barbaric and horror that have appeared in this civilization that we have not yet. Special discoveries are the form of binding the hands, legs, neck with metal shackles . there are also many mysteries that have not been satisfactorily explained waiting for scientists to study more in the future.
