Apple did not say a word about the new ringtone on the iPhone X, but the company is famous for choosing sounds with stories hidden behind them.

The first marimba ringtone used on the iPhone comes from the sound of Alexander Graham Bell, with the complex research of Apple and scientists to determine if the sound is capable of allowing the brain to read it as a warning or not.

The same approach applies to Reflection on iPhone X, but at the moment people are much interested in new features on the iPhone, TrueDepth camera, Face ID, slotted screen (rabbit ears), part New software is more than this new ringtone sound.

One thing you need to know is that even though Reflection is available in iOS 11.1, only iPhone X has received Reflection, it is likely that Apple wants to use it as a feature to celebrate the launch of the iPhone 10 years ago, making it it is more prominent than other iPhone models.
