Samsung is ready to launch the Galaxy S25 strategic product line at the Unpacked event taking place on January 22 in San Jose, California (USA).

Samsung is all set to unveil its flagship Galaxy S25 lineup at its Unpacked event on January 22 in San Jose, California. The company has already released a teaser that hints at the AI ??upgrades coming to the Galaxy S25 series. Unlike previous years, the Galaxy S25 series will not only include the usual trio of models—Galaxy S25, Galaxy S25+, and Galaxy S25 Ultra—Samsung is also expected to introduce, or at least give the first glimpse of, the all-new Galaxy S25 Slim model.

Besides factors such as appearance design or hardware power, another small aspect that also receives a lot of attention from fans of the new foldable phone line is the wallpaper package designed and introduced by Samsung separately with the product. These wallpapers not only bring creativity, but sometimes also imply the messages that the manufacturer sends with the new product line.

Although we're still a few weeks away from the launch, the original wallpapers for the lineup have been leaked via unofficial sources. They include two high-resolution variants of what are believed to be the Galaxy S25 lineup. One is a light wallpaper, with a gradient from light blue to light yellow with a large "S" in the middle. The second is a dark wallpaper with a gradient from dark blue to light green with the "S" in the middle, stretching from top to bottom. Both wallpapers have a resolution of 908x1953 pixels.

Hopefully Samsung will add more options to the Galaxy S25 wallpaper library when the series officially launches. For now, if you're interested in getting ready for the Galaxy S25 launch, or just want to freshen up your phone, you can download the wallpapers by clicking on the images above.
