

Evil Dead: The Game tips for beginners

Evil Dead: The Game - a survival horror role-playing game based on the famous Ghost Tree, compared to Dead By Daylight due to its asymmetrical gameplay and bloody horror theme.

In fact, Evil Dead: The Game is a very different game and can take a while to get used to, whether you're new to the genre or have spent hundreds of hours rolling around in Dead By Daylight.

New players will have a much easier time banishing the Dark Ones (or sending the world into eternal darkness) thanks to a clear understanding of the game's content. In this article, let's discover Evil Dead: The Game tips for beginners, helping players win against hostile forces.

Survivors need to stick together

One of the main mechanics of Evil Dead: The Game is Fear. As survivors explore the map, each character's fear increases.

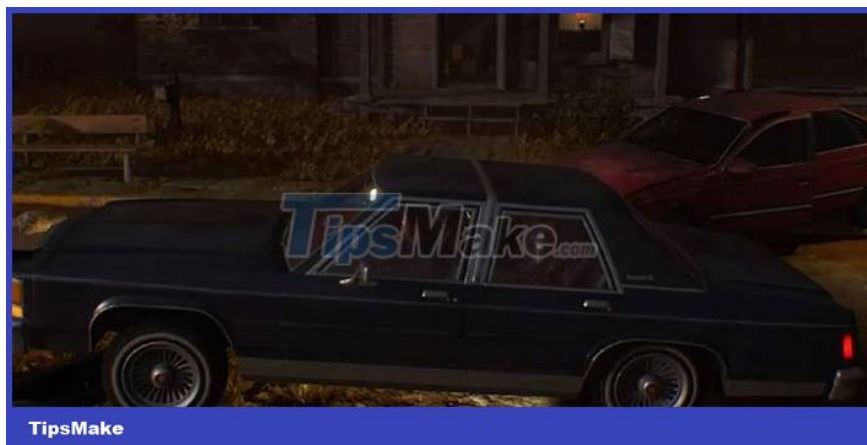

The more characters reach a high level of Fear, the faster the Kandarian Demon will level up. If the character's Fear meter is at maximum, demons can sense and even take over their body, temporarily taking control of the character and attacking other survivors.

Fear is inevitable, but survivors can control it by staying together and making a clear plan. Character's fear grows much faster without teammates around, so it's important not to run away on your own. Similarly, the devil player can greatly benefit from isolating survivors.

Use transportation

The game's map is quite large, and survivors have limited time to gather all the ingredients needed to banish the Dark Ones. Although driving a vehicle would attract the Devil's attention, it was a much faster and safer method of travel than traveling on foot.

Walking through the forest causes survivors to attack Deadite and unnecessarily increase Fear level, so if a vehicle is found, use it to get to the next destination.

This is the same with demons, if survivors are found and there is a car nearby, the devil can possess it. Alternatively, the devil can distract with Deadites and then drive the vehicle far away.

Always turn on the flashlight when searching the house

Indoor zones provide enough sense of security to allow survivors to recover from increased fear, and they also tend to be the places with the most items to grab.

Whenever you're searching your home for supplies, remember to turn on a flashlight. Some items will only appear if illuminated by a survivor's flashlight, so leaving it out will cause players to miss out on useful items.
