

Facebook acquisition of Instagram - Users delete accounts

Not everyone is happy with information about the Instagram acquisition just announced by Facebook today.

Not everyone is happy with information about the Instagram acquisition just announced by Facebook today.

>>>Facebook buys Instagram for up to $ 1 billion

A rather unexpected reaction occurred when a series of users shared on Twitter about their intention to delete Instagram accounts. They expressed concern about the huge social networking site that could infiltrate personal data through Instagram's account.

Many users expressed their intention to remove Instagram on Twitter

Some tech blogs even post tips and tools to get users' data out of Instagram such as Instaport. Users also find an Instagram notification that allows users to delete accounts. (However, the advice for you is not to rush to do anything unsure, when deleting an Instagram account you won't be able to register again under that name anymore.)

Obviously, users' concerns are not about Facebook changing Instagram or closing this service (this is not possible). Users interested in Facebook are invading privacy and collecting all personal data into large databases.

Will users be overreacting, or perhaps they just want something smaller, more private?

That's why other small and specialized social networks (Path, Pair, Pinwheel .) were born to serve users' needs and replace (or even escape) a Facebook with size and Scary scale.

You finished reading the article "Facebook acquisition of Instagram - Users delete accounts" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

