

Facebook allows users to reply to comments in Wall via email

This improvement step is welcomed by the crowd of users - especially those who work outside the desk and the company they stop Facebook at the work place.

Network administrator - Facebook now allows users to reply to wall posts, upgrade status, comment photos via email, and this eliminates the need to log in through your account. This improvement step is welcomed by the crowd of users - especially those who work outside the desk and the company they stop Facebook at the work place.

This feature, Facebook announced on Tuesday, and still not available to all users. Maybe users will have to wait a few more hours, maybe a few days to be able to perform this function on Facebook.

The content of this feature is described as follows: When you receive an email notification from Facebook, this message tells you that someone wrote on your wall, then you can respond with a comment. by clicking reply, type in the content of your reply and press the submit button. The content of the email will appear on Facebook next to the original comment. Users will have to click on the link in Facebook e-mail, go to Facebook.com, log in, then post a reply.

In order for this feature to work, you must ensure that your Facebook notification settings are turned on (done by going to "Account Settings," followed by "Notifications," and checking and checking the appropriate boxes). This feature will only work when responding to email notifications related to upgrading status and comments on the left of photos, videos and wall posts. However, you will still have to log in to Facebook to respond to private notifications.

This new Facebook addition can be quite small, but it is really useful for users, especially those who do everything from their email accounts.

You finished reading the article "Facebook allows users to reply to comments in Wall via email" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.