

Facebook is about to allow users to express their feelings and tag friends while chatting on Messenger apps

Facebook recently announced it will release two new features in the Messenger application called Reactions and Mentions.

Facebook recently announced it will release two new features in the Messenger application called Reactions and Mentions.

Reactions feature will allow users to express their feelings to each other's chat like the expression of emotion on regular Facebook posts. Special points are Reactions will only have 7 emoticons. which will include the most anticipated icon, Dislike emoticons.

The second new feature of Messenger is the Mentions feature. While chatting with a person or a chat group, you can type the @ symbol plus the name of another person to call them into the conversation as well as to let them know that this conversation is referring to them. , like the tag feature on Facebook. Of course you can also turn off notifications for that conversation if you feel the story is not related to you or feels troublesome.

These two features will appear on Messenger's new update in the next few days.

You finished reading the article "Facebook is about to allow users to express their feelings and tag friends while chatting on Messenger apps" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

