

Facebook updates the new interface, adding a grid view on the personal page

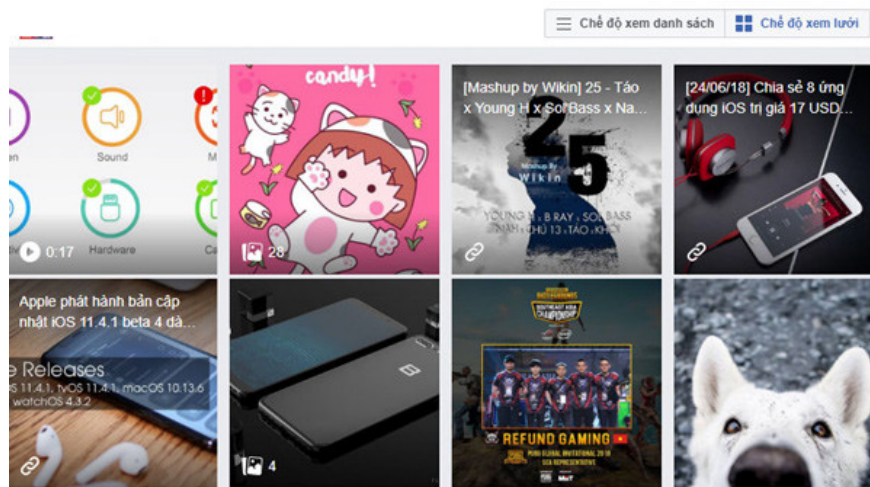

Social network Facebook version on the web browser has recently been updated with the new interface, allowing users to have a new option of a grid format outside the list of currently used lists.

Social network Facebook version on the web browser has recently been updated with the new interface, allowing users to have a new option of a grid format outside the list of currently used lists.

With the newly added grid option, the posts on the user's personal page will be arranged similarly to the image or album item. This change is not a big one, but it helps the personal page interface of users especially those who have a lot more intuitive posts and bring new experiences.

Each article is minimized and only the title, summary, and artwork are displayed. When the user clicks on the thumbnail, the full article section will not appear in the list mode but instead in the form of a pop-up.

Visit your Facebook profile to experience the new interface.

Currently the new Facebook interface is being updated in separate account groups, so some users may not be updated.

See more:

1. Coming soon with the feature to automatically translate messages on Facebook Messenger
2. Facebook allows administrators to collect membership fees from the Group from 4.99 to 29.99 USD / month
3. Take photos that are closed with your eyes closed, don't worry about Facebook's new AI technology that will help you 'open your eyes'

You finished reading the article "Facebook updates the new interface, adding a grid view on the personal page" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.