A great war between the jaguar and crocodile takes place at a river in Brazil makes many people not startled.

Photographer Luiz Claudio was very lucky to capture the impressive images of this fierce battle.

An American jaguar was reckless when deciding to drink water at a section of the Piquiri River, the Pantanal wetland in the state of Mato Grosso, Brazil. This is the location of the ferocious Yacare crocodile species known as the water killer.

When he discovered the underwater crocodile, it slowly observed.

The jaguar weighs about 100kg, while drinking water at the river bank, it finds a Yacare crocodile under water. The jaguar slowly observed and gently waded into the river and was always in a defensive position and ready to wait for the opportunity to attack prey.

Yacare crocodile, dubbed the "killer" river in Central South America.

This crocodile Yacare weighs about 60kg, is about 2m long, their favorite food is fish, especially piranhas, birds, reptiles and mammals.

A historic war in the natural world took place, on one side was the swamp assassin, one on the ground was the best predator.

With extremely strong bites, the cat family only needs one bite to penetrate the protective layer of any animal. The jaguar plugged its sharp teeth into the crocodile's head, causing the victim to puncture his skull and lose his life. So the aggressive crocodile is "lost" right on the home field.

The crocodile became a fresh lunch of jaguar.

The evolution of another fierce battle between jaguars and crocodiles.
