

Firefox launched a new flat-design logo with 23 Beta version

The new Firefox logo is designed in a flat fashion like iOS 7 or Windows Phone with less detail. Glossiness as well as sesame color is also reduced compared to before. Mozilla also released a picture that makes it easy to compare the changes of the new logo to the previous generation logos.

Shortly after the official release of Firefox 22, Mozilla has just released a Firefox 23 beta with the most notable point being a completely new logo.

The new Firefox logo is designed in a flat fashion like iOS 7 or Windows Phone with less detail. Glossiness as well as sesame color is also reduced compared to before. Mozilla also released a picture that makes it easy to compare the changes of the new logo to the previous generation logos.

This logo will be used first in Firefox 23 beta . This browser version will allow access to Mozilla's Social API. Social API is a set of features that help integrate social networks into the browser window. Thanks to this API, Facebook users can quickly share photos, articles, videos, links on this social network with friends, with just a click from the browser toolbar toolbar.

In addition, Beta 23 will also be equipped with a Mixed Content Blocker feature that blocks content using HTTP (which is not secure) and is not allowed to download on HTTPS sites. Specifically, when a user accesses a website that contains both safe and dangerous content, Firefox by default will block the site from allowing access.

The new Network Monitor feature on Firefox 23 Beta makes it possible for developers to keep track of the page load rates. The browser also contains optimizations for OS X 10.7 with the scroll bar style enabled on this operating system.

For mobile users, the new Beta version of Firefox has also been updated to include some features such as hiding the Awesome Bar, manually perfecting the URL . The newly updated RSS feed reader allows you to add feeds by holding down the Awesome Bar.

You finished reading the article "Firefox launched a new flat-design logo with 23 Beta version" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.