

Flickr extends the time for deleting photos of free accounts

In November 2018, Flickr announced that it would remove the amount of images that exceeded the user's free storage plan since February 5, 2019. In his latest announcement, Flickr decided to extend it and the deadline is March 12, 2019.

In November 2018, Flickr - the popular photo hosting and sharing service, once announced it would remove the amount of images that exceeded the user's free storage plan since February 5, 2019.

And in their latest announcement, Flickr said it had decided to extend the deletion period until March 12, 2019 due to receiving a lot of feedback from its members.

To be able to host unlimited on Flickr users will have to pay a fee of $ 50 a year, free accounts can only store 1000 photos. According to the announcement last year, the number of extra photos will be deleted (starting with the oldest photo) before February 5, 2019.

Luckily, Flickr has extended the file and allowed it to download files that exceed the allowed capacity, and the deadline is March 12, 2019.

To download photos on Flickr to your computer, you can refer to the article 'How to download all photos on Flickr'.

Flickr Pro account allows users to store unlimited photos and videos at native resolution speed up to 10 minutes in length. In addition, Flickr Pro does not contain ads, supports many high-end services, and includes discounts when purchasing products from partners such as Peak Design, Adobe.

You finished reading the article "Flickr extends the time for deleting photos of free accounts" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

---