

Fortnite officially opened the open beta version, all Android users can download and experience

Fortnite for Android has officially opened the open beta version. This means that any Android user who likes Battle Royale on Fortnite can participate in this battle without an invitation.

Previously, only Samsung Galaxy owners and those who received the invitation to join the closed beta version can play Fortnite on Android devices.

But today, Fortnite for Android has officially opened the open beta version. This means that any Android user who likes Battle Royale on Fortnite can participate in this battle without an invitation.

However, users will not be able to download this game to the device via Android's app market because Fortnite still says no to Google Play Store. The reason for this is because Epic Games wants to connect directly with their users and does not want to share 30% of revenue with the Play Store app market. Not only Play Store but Steam has been ignored by Sweeney for the same reason.

In order to participate in the open beta version, users must access the game website according to the link below on Android device and download the individual installer by browser, or scan QR Code.
