Recently, electronics giant Fujitsu and Japan launched the new N7010 laptop with two monitors.

Recently, electronics giant Fujitsu, Japan has launched the new N7010 laptop with two screens, including a smaller touch screen to increase the convenience of use.

Fujitsu's 'superhuman' laptop called LifeBook N7010 is the version released after two pretty cult versions of LifeBook A1110 and LifeBook A6220.

The most special feature of this new laptop is the integration of a 4-inch LCD touch screen above the keyboard with the main function is the screen to adjust music, view photos and open folders quickly.

With this touch screen the user can split the working windows at both the main screen and the sub touch screen below without affecting each other.

In addition, the N7010 is quite well configured with Intel Core 2 Duo chip, 2.26 GHz speed, 256MB video card, Wi-fi, Bluetooth and integrated Blu-ray format reader, 16-inch main screen , support connecting HDMI to HDTV.

Originally revealed, the price of the LifeBook N7010 is around $ 1499 and will be available in the market from November 10.
