

Fujitsu revealed ultrabook using Ivy Bridge chip

LifeBook has the thickest point of 16 mm and is equipped with hardware like Core i5 chip, RAM 8GB, 128GB SSD.

LifeBook has the thickest point of 16 mm and is equipped with hardware like Core i5 chip, RAM 8GB, 128GB SSD.

The LifeBook U772 is rumored to hit the market this June. (Photo: Notebookcheck).

Fujitsu has just released its latest ultrabook called LifeBook U772 on DinSide website. This product is rumored to be launched in June this year but has not yet had a specific selling price.

U772 uses Core i5 processor based on Intel's latest Ivy Bridge platform. The LifeBook U772's screen measures 14 inches with a resolution of 1,366 x 768 pixels. The device is equipped with 8GB RAM and 128GB SSD. According to Notebookcheck, the thickest point on the Fujitsu LifeBook U772 is 16mm.

In addition, the device is equipped with Wi-Fi 802.11 a / b / g / n connections, Bluetooth 4.0, USB 2.0, USB 3.0. This product also integrates SDXC memory card slot and supports HDMI protocol.

Real photo of Fujitsu Lifebook U772

---

This product is equipped with a 14 inch screen.

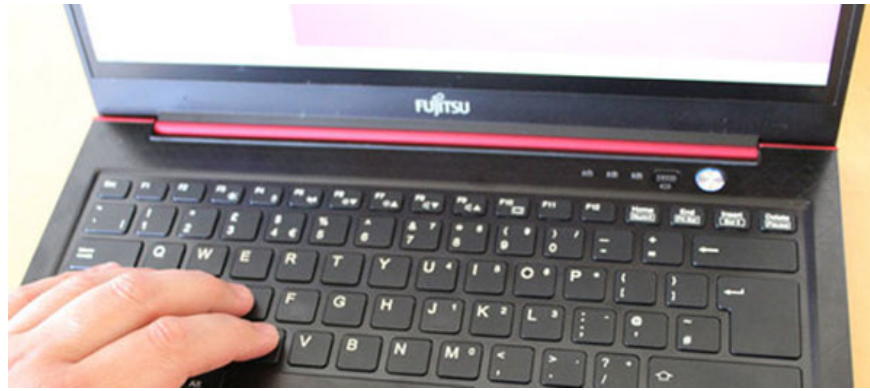

On the left side of the device, there is a listening jack, USB port.

Meanwhile, most connections are brought to the right side.

The thickest point on the LifeBook U772 is 16mm.

Chiclet keyboard.

The mouse hoverboard is hidden with two extra keys.

The product's selling price is still unknown.

You finished reading the article "Fujitsu revealed ultrabook using Ivy Bridge chip" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

---