

Gmail tested displaying promotional messages in an eye-catching image

Google is testing the interface of displaying new advertising messages with Gmail accounts, it does not display the same as the usual text and title but will display large and bold frame images.

Google is testing the interface of displaying new advertising messages with Gmail accounts, it does not display the same as the usual text and title but will display large and bold frame images.

This interface will be applied in Gmail's classified mail frame, avoiding users inundated with work emails and promotional emails. You can sign up to try the new feature by clicking on the link here. After reviewing, the Gmail account will have a switch button between the two arrangements.

This move by Google helps users to feel the correct advertising letters instead of text like other regular emails. It is unclear when Google applies this upgrade to all users.

You finished reading the article "Gmail tested displaying promotional messages in an eye-catching image" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.