

Google, Apple and many other large companies employing employees no longer require a college degree

According to a report by Glassdoor, a job search site, there are now 15 leading companies in the world, including Apple, Google, IBM ... that have changed their recruitment policies and no longer require applications. Students must have a university degree.

According to a report by Glassdoor, a job search site, there are now 15 leading companies in the world, including Apple, Google, IBM . that have changed their recruitment policies and no longer require applications. Students must have a university degree.

Laszlo Bock, Google's human resources manager, said: 'People who don't go to college and still succeed in careers are outstanding people. And we should find ways to find such people. '

Currently, Apple no longer requires its candidates to apply for important positions such as design engineers, project managers . need to have a university degree. Whether or not a college degree is available, employees will also enjoy the same incentives.

Bank of America, a major financial institution in the world, also recruits positions such as solution analysis, market management, customer management and business advice, no longer requiring a university degree. Starbucks also does not require a university degree for candidates applying for a store manager position.

That does not mean that these companies do not value college degrees. They still play a common role in assessing applicants for admission but education qualifications will no longer be a barrier for those who do not choose their education path.

Please apply for any position that you believe you can do whether you have a college degree or not, the opportunity for everyone is equal. Important is your constant learning spirit, not attending college does not mean that you stop learning but you need to find yourself a private way of learning, even learning many times more than others to perfect your opinion. knowledge, skills needed and always available when given the opportunity.

Of course to achieve success, you may have to go through many failures, but it is important that you keep your passion for your dreams and keep learning and supplementing your knowledge to achieve your goals.

List of 15 big companies of Glassdoor no longer require employees to have a university degree including: Google, Apple, IBM, Hilton, Starbucks, Ernst & Young, Whole Foods, Penguin Random House, Costco Wholesale, Publix, Nordstrom, Home Depot, Bank of America, Chipotle and Lowe's.

See more:

1. Technology firms increasingly employ many workers without technical and technological skills
2. Standing up for a job plaque, the homeless guy received an invitation from Google and hundreds of other companies
3. Be aware of these employers' 16 questions
4. Top 6 qualities of IT employers looking for

You finished reading the article "Google, Apple and many other large companies employing employees no longer require a college degree" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.