

Google changes the search engine, gives a unique answer and hides unnecessary links in some cases

Since the beginning of this year, Google has tested a number of major changes to its search engine, making search results only display a single direct answer instead of links like before.

Since the beginning of this year, Google has tested a number of major changes to its search engine, making search results only display a single direct answer instead of links like before.

The reason for this change is because Google thinks that displaying a series of links will confuse users and a direct answer will be a better solution in some cases.

For example, users want to know what time it is in the US or how much $2 + 2$ calculation results are? Displaying a single direct answer with such questions will help the user's query process be faster and simpler than displaying a series of links below.

Google said, initially this change was applied to time-related queries, calculations and a few unit conversions. The links below will be hidden, but users can still click on the extension to view.
