

Google Docs tool to correct English grammar with AI

Recently, Google has introduced an AI-based English grammar checking tool for Google Docs users to detect basic grammatical errors (such as using a instead of security) to larger problems with configuration sentence structure as sub-clauses.

Recently, Google has introduced AI-based English grammar testing tool for Google Docs users. This feature works in tandem with the existing Google Docs spell check feature to detect basic grammatical errors (like using "a" instead of "an") to larger problems with configuration sentence structure as user sub-clauses.

With this grammar checking tool, when working on Google Docs users will no longer have to switch to using the same spell checking tools.

Basically, this error checking tool of Google Docs is an AI system so it can identify errors and give accurate suggestions based on users' work habits.

Currently, only members of Google's Early Adopter Program can use this new tool in Google Docs. Users can access the link below to register.

1. Early Adopter Program

This tool will be available to G Suite users (corporate customers) in the near future, and for individual users it is not yet clear when Google will officially launch.
