

Google is the reason why Android smartphones are sold expensive

Recently there have been rumors that Google is likely to appear in court by secret acts of agreement with manufacturers, leading to a high price of Android smartphones.

Recently there have been rumors that Google is likely to appear in court by secret acts of agreement with manufacturers, leading to a high price of Android smartphones.

Specifically, the Northern California District Court (USA) has just received a lawsuit accusing Google of referring to the " night " of the company with mobile giants to bring applications such as YouTube and Google Play into key positions. on the device screen.

Two good examples of these implicit deals are Google shaking hands with Samsung and HTC. Specifically, users have to pay too much for Samsung Galaxy S3 and HTC Evo 3D models due to " underground commitment " between the parties together. There is still no clear amount of money on each product is how much and in addition to the above two product lines, there are also Android smartphones that are within the framework of the agreement?

To defend themselves, Google has stated that " anyone can use Android without using Google applications and vice versa, anyone can use Google without being forced to use Android ." However, what the US software giant did not mention was that before the lawsuit, Google had been " intimidated " by the judicial authorities of Europe and the United States about how the company promoted online services. . Demonstrating that in February, Google had to settle an antitrust lawsuit related to its search engine.
