

Google Maps displays user generated videos on the map

Your destination will be more alive than ever when searching with Google Maps.

Google has just added a new video-related feature to its map application. Now, when searching for a place, users can also find videos of places where you often see user-posted images.

Currently, only Local Guides - designated users who contribute photos, reviews and information about restaurants, parks, museums and other locations - on Android devices can upload videos to locations . But perhaps this will soon become an option for many others, such as businesses that want to promote their products.

Videos will be added to the search location on Google Maps

Despite being quietly released since the end of August, the feature of this video was released publicly and last week.

In the near future, when searching for a beach location, you will see videos of the beach, fish market or surrounding locations on the left, near where the static images are displayed.

Both photos and videos of the beach will appear

You finished reading the article "Google Maps displays user generated videos on the map" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
