

Google Now will be integrated into the Chrome browser

The Google representative has just announced that he will bring the Google Now utility to the Chrome browser on personal computers in the near future.

The Google representative has just announced that he will bring the Google Now utility to the Chrome browser on personal computers in the near future.

According to Engadget on 9.12, Google's programming team has now created a "framework" to integrate Google Now into Chrome. As a result, users can use voice to view weather forecasts, job reminders, friends' birthday announcements, .

Google Now will be available soon on Chrome

With Google's move, it can be seen that the "search giant" wants users to be aware of Google's ecosystem. For example, for mobile devices, Android is used, and for personal computers, Chrome is available.

Google Now, previously known as Voice Actions, is a feature available on Android phones with the ability to recognize users' voices to perform commands such as viewing maps, viewing weather forecasts, take reminders,.

To Android 4.1 version, it was renamed to Google Now.

You finished reading the article "Google Now will be integrated into the Chrome browser" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

