

Google officially launched Google Pay payment service to replace Android Pay globally

Google has launched Google Pay, an application that combines Google Wallet and Android Pay, which can handle all forms of user payments. Users worldwide can download this application through the Play Store app store.

Google has launched Google Pay, an application that combines Google Wallet and Android Pay, which can handle all forms of user payments. Users worldwide can download this application through the Play Store app store.

Because Google Pay is a combination of Google Wallet and Android Pay, it owns all the advantages of these two applications. However, its features will be updated slowly. Before receiving and sending features are added to Google Pay, Wallet will temporarily change its name to Google Pay Send.

According to Google, this new application will help customers get a safer and easier payment experience wherever they are, and easily access promotions, incentives of businesses .

Google's goal is to integrate Google Pay into all of its products to give users a consistent payment experience with bank cards saved to Google Accounts. At the same time, Google also cooperates with online partners, in stores, so on Google e-commerce sites, in applications and at famous places all over the world.

The interface of Google Pay is divided into tabs to help users easily review the nearby payments and promotions. All payment operations are very simple.

With devices currently installed Android Pay will automatically update to Google Pay with new features.

1. Instructions for removing payment cards on iTunes

2. How to recharge your phone via Zalo Pay application
3. Instructions for ordering online on Taobao
4. Online buying experience on Alibaba

You finished reading the article "Google officially launched Google Pay payment service to replace Android Pay globally" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
