

Google Photos officially stops saving photos for free

From June 1, 2021, Google Photos officially stops storing free photos and videos, uploaded files will be counted towards Google's default 15GB of storage.

After the allotted date, the user will continue to upload images until the entire accompanying 15GB is full, at which point the user will have to delete the image or purchase additional storage. On the other hand, Google will delete all files in the account when the user is inactive for 2 years.

Users will not be able to store their photos to Google Photos for free, whether storing in high quality or original photos will count towards Google's default 15GB.

All photos stored by users before June 1, 2021 will not apply this change, but only to photos saved after this date.

Along with that, Google has also changed the "High quality" image option to "Storage saver". And of course, this new option will also count towards the user's free 15GB and the quality of the Storage saver will not be the same as the original image.

Pixel phone users will continue to get unlimited free photo and video backups on Google Photos, but for a certain period of time set by Google.

At the same time, Google will provide a tool in June 2021 that will allow users to manage backed up photos and videos, the tool will automatically mark dark or blurry images, large videos that users may not be able to see. want to keep, then give a hint asking the user if he wants to delete.

The new Google policy will apply to all Google Photos users across all platforms including Android, iOS, and desktop.

Thus, after nearly 6 years of "trial", the Google Photos photo storage service officially charges all users. Users who want more storage will have to buy more for 45,000 VND/month.

You finished reading the article "Google Photos officially stops saving photos for free" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.